

Investing £100,000 into MAF Plus III

The MAF Plus funds are split across different assets designed to both grow and maintain the value of your money. The below diagram gives an example of where that money could go (subject to change, data as at 31 December 2025). As a reminder, wherever your money is invested, its value will go up and down and you could get back less than you put in. Speak to a financial adviser if you're in any doubt about what's right for you.

Key risks for investors in MAF Plus

Before you invest in a multi-asset fund, the below risks should be considered:

Investment/objective risk: The value of an investment and any income from it can go down as well as up. Investors may not get back the original amount invested.

Currency risk: The fund holds investments in different currencies. Changes in exchange rates can affect the returns, even if the fund tries to reduce this risk.

Derivatives risk: Derivatives are complex financial products that get their value from something else, like a raw material or a currency. They can be used to try to protect investments or to make extra profits, but they can also be risky. They can behave unpredictably (especially in unusual market conditions) and can cause bigger losses than expected; sometimes greater than the cost of the derivative itself.

Emerging markets risk: Emerging markets are countries with growing economies that are still developing. Investing in emerging markets can be riskier and more unpredictable than investing in developed markets.

For further information on the exhaustive risks of the MAF Plus funds, please refer to the relevant KIID and Prospectus.

Defensive Fixed Income includes safer forms of bonds like government and investment grade bonds:

- Government bonds are like a loan where investors lend funds to a government, and they promise to pay you back with interest.
- Investment grade bonds are loans to entities with a high credit rating.

Growth Fixed Income includes riskier forms of bonds, such as debt securities issued by emerging markets.

Emerging markets are countries whose economies are transitioning from developing to more advanced stages. They typically show rapid growth, increasing industrialization, and improving infrastructure, but may still face political or financial instability.

Equities are shares of ownership in a company, typically traded on stock markets.

The investment team may make short term changes to the investments in the fund to try to improve returns for investors. In some cases, this includes holdings that are intended to perform well if an investment's price goes down.
